Biography

George Francis Archambault was born on April 29, 1909 in Springfield, Massachusetts. In his teenage years, Archambault worked for a Springfield pharmacist and later attended the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy (MCP), where he received his PhG (1931) and PhC (1933) degrees. Archambault went on to receive his JD from Northeastern University in 1941 and was admitted to the Massachusetts bar in 1942.

Archambault was commissioned to the United Public Health Service (USPHS) in 1945 and served as an influential leader throughout his career. He served as President of the American Pharmacists Association from 1962-1963. Deputy Surgeon General Rear Admiral Kenneth P. Moritsugu proclaimed Archambault a "Living Treasure of the United States Public Health Service Commissioned Corps." Archambault's impressive career includes the highest awards of pharmacy, including the 1969 Remington Medal from the American Pharmacists Association and the 1962 Craigie Award from the Association of Military Surgeons.

This scholarship honors Archambault's long career of dedicated service to the pharmacy profession and the Public Health Service. The scholarship was established by the Archambault Foundation in 2011.
